Honour Based Abuse Female Genital Mutilation and Forced Marriage

Honour Based Abuse

Honour Based Abuse is defined as 'an incident or crime which has or may have been committed to protect or defend the honour of the family and or the community'.

It is described as a way to prevent a person from bringing shame to a family or community, or punish them for doing so. Honour Based Abuse will often go hand in hand with forced marriages, although this is not always the case.

Female Genital Mutilation

Female Genital Mutilation is a crime.

It comprises of all procedures involving the partial or total removal of the external female genitalia or any other injury to the female genital organs for non-medical reasons. Female Genital Mutilation is sometimes known as 'female genital cutting' or female circumcision. Communities tend to use local names for referring to this practice, including 'sunna'.

Forced Marriage

Forced Marriage is a crime. It is where one or both spouses do not or cannot consent to the marriage and duress is used by family, friends or the community. Duress can come in many forms and can include threats, physical, sexual, psychological abuse and emotional pressure. It is a form of domestic abuse and is in some cases child abuse. Forced Marriage is not the same as an arranged marriage where both parties give full consent.

You can choose if and whom you want to marry and should not feel forced to marry against your will.

Forced Marriage, Honour Based Abuse and Female Genital Mutilation are crimes in the UK. You have rights and help is out there. All adults and children have the right to live without fear, to not be abused, threatened or controlled.

Who can help?

If you are worried about the risk or threats of abuse or forced marriage from family or community either towards yourself or another, help is out there. The police and partner agencies are here to offer support, advice and protect you. You don't have to put up with abuse.
